Government and Parliament

- The UK has a monarch. The monarch is the head of state. Parliament makes the laws.
- The UK Parliament is in London, in the Palace of Westminster. It has two parts: the House of Commons and the House of Lords.
- In the House of Commons there are MPs. Voters choose them. Each MP speaks for one local area.
- The House of Lords is the second part. People do not vote for its members in a general election. It checks new laws.
- The Prime Minister leads the government. This is usually the leader of the biggest party.
- When both parts of Parliament agree a new law, the monarch signs it. This is called Royal Assent.
- Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland each have their own parliament or assembly. England does not. England uses the UK Parliament.

Elections and voting

- A general election chooses the MPs. It happens at least every five years.
- Voting is secret. You mark a paper at a polling station. Some people vote by post.
- You must register to vote. You go on the electoral register.
- Each MP speaks for one local area. The party with most support in the Commons usually runs the government.

- Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland also vote for their own parliament or assembly. Everyone also votes in local elections.
- For general elections the voting age is 18 now. The government wants to change it to 16. Check gov.uk.

Values, rights and the law

- Important values in the UK are democracy, the rule of law, freedom, and respect for people with different beliefs.
- The rule of law means everyone must follow the law. This includes the government.
- Courts decide if someone broke the law. In serious cases in England and Wales, 12 people called a jury decide.
- In an emergency, call 999 or 112. To report a crime that is not an emergency, call 101.
- You can say what you think. You can follow a religion or no religion. You must respect other people's rights.
